Skills

Here are some suggestions to help you prepare for this skills area.

Preparation

- Early in the year, make sure you have a broad overview of the aspect you have chosen so that you have an understanding of key points.
- As you research, start thinking early about a specific topic which interests you so that you enjoy it.
- Select a topic which lends itself to particular interesting examples, such as diary entries for a historical topic, or your own experience of culture or region.
- Avoid lists of facts or dates; focus on interacting with the material by developing your opinions and ideas.
- Ensure that your language is appropriate to the level.
- Prepare a one minute introduction setting the context. This is an opportunity to convey your interest and enthusiasm for your topic and you may wish to include a brief reason why you chose it.

- Prepare information and ideas based on five bullet points which you will put on the proforma; these should be concise, and lend themselves to analysis, not simply to description.
- Practice delivering your introduction like a presentation; speak confidently and clearly and work on developing authentic pronunciation and intonation.

On the day of the examination

Introduction

- Do not speak too quickly. It is better to have less information and deliver it in an engaging way rather than rush to include everything in one minute.

Discussion

- Be prepared to answer the examiner's questions rather than deliver five mini-presentations on the bullet points.
- Develop your answers as much as possible.
- Take initiatives to include interesting information and insights.
- Use fillers and phrases to give a natural feel, but avoid overusing these.
